

audiophiles are not a whole lot more confused than they are. While the lovers of esotericism are certainly pleased by all that is going on, individuals who want rational information, so that they can settle down and enjoy their record collections, are penalized. This is particularly true if they are just getting started in audio, because to an outsider, even nonsense may seem plausible until an educational foundation has been developed. Before that happens, some neophyte audiophiles may have spent a great deal of unnecessary cash for equipment of dubious quality, even if it has a fine fit and finish.

Thus, any audiophile, whether he or she is a "music lover" or not, should make it a habit to become at least a little educated about audio. The mainline journals, in spite of their often conservative views, are a good place to start. Probably the writings of Julian Hirsch (Stereo Review) and Michael Riggs (High Fidelity) are the safest reading bet in the audio writer hierarchy. I would be very suspicious of most of what is written in the fringe magazines, although there is little doubt that an occasional useful tidbit may crop up. I always felt that the columns I wrote for Fanfare were helpful to newcomers and my American Record Guide columns have endeavored to point out what is important in audio and what is not.

For those of you who want to get more involved in this interesting hobby (a hobby that will certainly enhance a record collector's listening pleasure), I really do suggest joining the Boston Audio Society. Their magazine, the Speaker, is nationally distributed and is frequently a wealth of data not ordinarily found in the mainline or underground press. It is essentially a forum where views, some sound and some pretty far out, are traded by the society members. In recent issues, for instance, several members discussed the long term performance of Yamaha's new DSP-1, surround sound system. Annual membership is $22 and includes the magazine subscription. For more information, contact the Editor, BAS Speaker, P.O. Box 7, Boston, MA 00221-0007. Good listening.
